SECTION A: UK GOVERNMENT

Answer ONE question from either Question 1(a) or Question 1(b) and then answer ONE question from either Question 2(a) or Question 2(b).

EITHER

1 (a) This source is adapted from an article in the Financial Times in November 2019.

Source 1

Nigel Farage claimed that Brexit party supporters were offered peerages in an attempt to persuade the party not to field parliamentary candidates in the 2019 general election. After the general election, Farage vowed to campaign for a new political system by reforming the Lords, which he states has no democratic legitimacy. The average age of peers is 70 with too few women. The system of appointment produces an unprofessional chamber with 'working' and 'non-working' peers. Lacking legitimacy, the chamber is too weak to do its job. In 2015, research suggested a relationship between large political donors and nominations to the Lords is statistically significant.

However, the Lords display 'independence of thought' with many crossbenchers not being aligned to any political parties; many members see it as their duty to hold governments to account. Governments are regularly defeated in the Lords, which provides expert advice and informed scrutiny to the process of legislation. The independent House of Lords Appointments Commission vets all nominations for life peers, including those nominated by party leaders. This has increased the numbers of experts selected, and the Lords is now more representative: over 25% are women and around 6% come from ethnic minorities.

Do not answer Question 1(b) if you have answered Question 1(a).

OR

- 1 (b) This source is adapted from a Guardian article in September 2019. It reports on the unanimous judgement by the Supreme Court that the proroguing of Parliament by Boris Johnson was unlawful. The Court ruled that the original decision by the High Court was void, and the Speaker recalled Parliament.

Conservative MP Andrew Bridgen called the Supreme Court's judgement '...an absolute disgrace. It's the worst possible outcome for our democracy, with unelected judges completely ignoring the referendum vote we had in 2016 to leave the European Union.'

Critics argue that the Court has become too powerful, undermining parliamentary sovereignty in areas like 'Brexit', where judges should not stray. The increased use of judicial review means that in effect Parliament, as well as government, is often challenged. Our system, having no separation of powers, lacks clarity, which has enabled the Supreme Court to undermine Parliament.

However, Gina Miller said this is 'a win for parliamentary sovereignty, against an over-mighty executive'. It is right that the legality of the Prime Minister's decision was challenged as he was denying Parliament the right to scrutinise his 'Brexit' policy. Judicial reviews are an essential component of the rule of law, often upholding the will of Parliament against an executive that oversteps its powers under legislation.

With no separation of powers or a codified constitution, the Court has helped to rebalance the relationship between Parliament and the executive. However, critics argue declarations of incompatibility made by the Court challenge the sovereignty of Parliament and can be controversial.
